Test 07
Read the following passage and answer the questions.

It was the first day of the new Chinese year, the year of the dragon, and the people of Chinatown were heralding this occasion with an explosive celebration of life. As I walked down the packed street, sound, color and laughter danced around me.

From across the street, a flash of green caught my eye. A joyous dragon, spanning more than forty feet, pranced its way through the crowd. Although his twenty legs seemed to travel in twenty different directions, the dragon’s movements coalesced in a serpentine motion, hypnotizing all who watched his dance.

The dragon’s spell was soon broken by the sharp drumming of fireworks exploding on the street underfoot. Light and sound burst forth in chains of sounds that matched the mood of the crowd.

I could not help but be drawn into the whirlpool of emotions that surrounded me. Wave upon wave of joy poured into my soul. I became one with the people and dragon that danced around and through me. Before this night of joy was over, I knew that the coming year would be happy one.

Test 13
Read the following passage and match the sub topics with the paragraphs and write them in the given blanks.

1. Communication
2. Instinctive behaviour
3. Social behaviour
4. Learned behaviour
5. Territory behaviour

Animal Behaviour

All animals respond to their surroundings. Everything that an animal does and the way in which it does it, makes up its behaviour. An animal behavior enables it to increase its chances of survival. Some behaviors are inbuilt; others are learned during the animal’s lifetime.

a) ............................................................

It is a behaviour that an animal perform automatically without having to learn them. It is programmed by genes and it consists of unchanged patterns or fixed- action patterns. This will be active when there is a stimulus; another animal, change in surrounding or response of another creature.

b) ............................................................

This occurs when an animal adapts to its surroundings by changing its behaviour. By responding to experience and adapting to changing conditions, an animal increase its chances of survival. Learning takes time, and animals that are depend on this type of behaviour have long lives and large brains.

c) ............................................................

Animals send out signals that are recognized by other animals, and alter their behaviour in some way. The signals can be sights, sounds or scents. This is used, for example to find a mate, threatened rivals or enemies, defend a territory, warn of danger, or hold a group together.

d) ............................................................

Many animals defend their living area to maintain access to food, water, shelter and to reproduce. Living places can be large or small and held by one animal or by a group.

e) ............................................................

Some animals live in groups. Individuals co-operate to find food, defend themselves and look after the young. Social groups range from shoal of fish, which are purely defensive, to societies of honeybees, where social organization affects all aspects of an individual’s life.

Test 15

Read the passage and answer the questions.

My father’s family name is Pirrip, and my first name Philip, but as a child I couldn’t say either, so I called myself Pip and then so did everyone else.

I say that my name is Pirrup because that’s what is written on my father’s tombstone. It is what my sister told me. My sister is married to a blacksmith. We lived in a marshy area, down by the river a few miles from the sea.

One day, I stood in churchyard and looked over my parents’ tombstones at the dark flat wilderness beyond the churchyard. The marshes were crisscrossed with ditches and mounds. In the distance, I could see the grey line of the river and then, far away, the sea. It was a cold day.

The grey land and the grey sky made me feel sad. I suddenly realized that I was an orphan and I began to cry. “Hold your nose!” cried a terrible voice. It came from a man who had just stepped out from behind a gravestone. “Keep still, or I’ll cut your throat!”

This man was frightening. He was an escaped convict. He limped and, glared and growled. His teeth chattered in his head as he seized me by the chin.

“Oh! Don’t cut my throat, sir” I pleaded in terror.“ Tell me your name” said the man. “Quick”

“Pip,sir.”

“Show me where you live”, said the man. “Point out the place” I pointed to where our village lay a mile from the church. Then he turned me upside down, and emptied my pockets. There was nothing in them but a piece of bread. I sat, while he ate the bread ravenously.

“Where are your parents?” he asked. I pointed to the tombstones. “So, who do you live with? If I let you live which I haven’t made up my mind about” “My sister, sir- Mrs. Joe Gargery- wife of Mr. Joe Gargery, the blacksmith, sir.”

After looking at his legs and me several times, he took me by both hands, then he stared into my eyes.” Do you know what a file is? “Yes, sir” “Do you know what grub is?” “Yes, sir” You bring them both or I’ll have your heart and liver out” he said. I was dreadfully frightened and hoped he would not drop me. I clung to him with both hands.

He went on: “Early tomorrow morning, bring that file and grub. I am not alone. There is a young man hiding with me. In comparison with him I am an angel. That young man can hear us now. That young man has a secret way of getting at a boy and his heart and his liver.” When he put me down I ran as fast as I could.
